CURRENT SITUATION

Current Situation:	General Information As the expanding fire front transitions from backing to head fire through slope reversal, even small terrain changes are supporting uphill runs, short crown runs and short-range spotting. Fuels at critical fuel moisture levels continue to support an extremely receptive fuel bed for active fire behavior. There will be a Fresno County Community Meeting Tuesday, October 6, 2020 at 6:00 P.M. On line only– Facebook Live@FresnoCountyCA https://www.facebook.com/FresnoCountyCA South Zone: With evening temperatures slowly returning to normal range, humidity and cloud cover may moderate fire behavior. Expect moderate to locally intense surface fire, isolated torching, and rollout to contribute to the active fire footprint. Seasonally drought stressed fuels will continue to contribute to active fire behavior in all size classes

	North Zone: Slight chance of minimal precipitation, but cooler temps and higher RH and cloud cover should moderate fire behavior. However, uncontained fire in DIV J moves closer to MAP 2 if weather stays warm and dry. Weather: A steady cooling trend of 1-2° each day will continue through this week. Temperatures will lower to October normals by midweek. Thermal belts will set up tonight with limited humidity recovery. Smoke transport will follow diurnal slope winds with upslope transport during the afternoon, and smoke returning to lower elevations with downslope/down drainage flows overnight.
